Chairman Yuri Andropov welcomes you to the Committee for State Security. As a member of the KGB, you will face the challenges of maintaining Soviet supremacy throughout the world. Times are dangerous but could also be potentially rewarding for the U.S.S.R. in the latter stages of the 20th Century. This committee will be responsible for not only ensuring the success of covert Soviet operations in Afghanistan and Angola, but also expanding socialism abroad while dealing with demanding domestic politics.

In fifteen years, how will political and economic dynamics have changed in East Asia and in the Asia-Pacific? In this committee you will be joining a unique, specialized convention including professionals and politicians, brought together by the quandary of Taiwan's future. Economic crises, domestic riotings and international politics will force you to make some severely difficult decisions that will have reverberating impacts in the Taiwan Strait as well as across the Pacific. Your diplomatic skills will be tested as you strive to avoid conflict as you contemplate what should constitute as national identity for Taiwan.

The South African State Security Council of 1980 will exclusively formulate and execute national security policy. This committee will challenge you to make decisions quickly and effectively in order to mitigate civil unrest caused by apartheid, and to ameliorate South Africa's relations with the rest of the world, as international trade embargoes have created an unsettling recession. Meanwhile the threat of expanding communism in the region looms close to the nation. Responsibility to direct South Africa towards a better future lies in your hands. This committee will feature various statesmen, government and military officials, scientific experts, security force representatives, and prominent experts in foreign relations.
